The following is an Examiner's Statement of Reasons for Allowance: The prior art of record, including the U.S. Patent to Hernandez et al., considered as a whole, fails to teach or suggest a computer-assisted documentation system for enhancing or replacing the process of dictating and transcribing in the generation of a document including: means for providing document templates wherein each template consists of text and one or more option-text variables embedded in the text; option-text variable replacement means comprised of option-text storage means for storing a record identifier and character strings within the document template; document processing means comprised of user interface means for displaying character strings which comprise an option-text record associated with an option-text variable, string selection means for selecting one of the character strings to replace the option-text variable, and recording means for recording a pointer indicative of the selected character string; and document generating means for generating a document by replacing the option-text variable with the selected character string. Each of the above option-text variables is associated with an option-text record which is comprised of a plurality of character strings from which one character string will be selected to replace the option-text variable in the respective document template. Newly cited Hernandez et al. patent discloses a method for generating a document utilizing a plurality of windows associated with different
